Library 1.0

Libraries of the past may be described as environments in which resources are kept on shelves or in closed storage. While books and other bibliographic items are portable, they required a physical visit to the shelves or storage place. Library systems and procedures dictated one directional systems and procedures. Interaction with library staff included guidance of the reference librarians and checking out of materials by the circulation staff. In the Library 1.0 world library service took people to the information.
Library 2.0

Library 2.0 (or L2) aims to take information to the library users. L2 does replace the library as a storage place for books, but builds on that technology. Information locked in web sites, data bases, and in print is put to work for the library patron. In L2 the search system will not only look and gather the information you seek, but will learn and deliver more of what you need.

Ideas and Concepts of L2
Information goes two ways.
User feed back is encouraged.
Library reaches for new users and new services for current users
Welcome to Wright College Library
